WHAT IS CRYPTO TRADING ?

Crypto trading is the act of buying, selling, or exchanging cryptocurrencies like Bitcoin, Ethereum, or others through online platforms. Traders aim to profit from price changes in the crypto market, which is known for being highly volatile. Unlike traditional markets, crypto trading operates 24/7 and can involve short-term strategies (day trading) or long-term holding (HODLing). There are two main types of trading: spot trading, where actual coins are bought and sold, and derivatives trading, where traders speculate on price movements without owning the asset. Popular trading platforms include Binance, Coinbase, and Kraken. Traders use tools like technical analysis, charts, and indicators to make informed decisions. While crypto trading offers the potential for high returns, it also carries significant risk due to market unpredictability, security concerns, and regulatory issues. As a result, it's important to understand the market and use risk management strategies before getting involved.
